In the world of luxury jewellery, the term "14k gold" is often thrown around, but what exactly does it mean? If you're looking to invest in a piece of fine jewellery, understanding the different types of gold is essential. PureJewels, a trusted jeweller in London, is here to guide you through the ins and outs of 14k gold.

What is 14k gold, you may ask? Well, the "k" in 14k gold stands for karats, which is a unit of measurement used to determine the purity of gold. In the case of 14k gold, it means that the piece is made up of 58.3% pure gold, with the remaining 41.7% consisting of other metals such as copper, silver, or zinc. This alloying process is what gives 14k gold its durability and strength, making it a popular choice for everyday wear jewellery.

When it comes to choosing the right type of gold for your jewellery, 14k gold is a great option for those who want a balance between quality and affordability. While 24k gold is considered the purest form of gold, it is also the softest and most prone to scratching and bending. On the other hand, 10k gold is more durable but contains a lower percentage of pure gold. 14k gold strikes the perfect balance, offering a beautiful golden hue while still being strong enough to withstand everyday wear.

At PureJewels, we understand that purchasing jewellery is a personal and meaningful experience. That's why we take great care in sourcing the finest materials and working with skilled artisans to create pieces that are as unique as the individuals who wear them.
