If you are considering sell my gold coins, it is important to understand that gold coins may have value beyond their gold content.

The value of a gold coin can depend on factors such as its purity, weight, condition, authenticity and current gold market price. Some coins may also have additional value because of their age, rarity, historical importance or collectability.

For this reason, not every gold coin should automatically be valued only as scrap gold.

If you have original packaging, certificates or other documentation relating to your coins, keep these where possible. They may provide useful information about the item.

Before you sell my gold coins, it is worth understanding the type of coin you have and the factors that may affect its value.
