If you are considering sell old diamond rings, it is important to consider both the gold and the diamond when assessing the item.

The gold value may depend on the purity and weight of the ring. The diamond may have a separate value based on factors such as its carat weight, colour, clarity and cut.

The age of the ring may also be relevant. Some older rings may have additional value because of their design, craftsmanship or historical characteristics.

If you have a diamond certificate, original receipt or other documentation, keep it with the ring where possible.

Before selling an old diamond ring, consider whether the item may have value beyond its gold content. Understanding all the characteristics of the ring can help you make a more informed decision.
